The network shown in Figure 1 consists of a set of nodes and edges. The nodes represent the points of interest in the network, and the edges represent the connections between these points.

Each node in the network has a unique identifier, and the edges connect these nodes in a specific manner. The network can be used to model various systems, such as computer networks, biological networks, and social networks.

In the context of the network, the boundaries of certain regions or subnetworks can be defined. These boundaries are determined by the edges that form the perimeter of these regions.

The network is a powerful tool for understanding complex systems and can be used to analyze and predict various phenomena within these systems.

Figure 2 illustrates a simple example of a network. The network consists of four nodes, and the edges connect these nodes in a specific manner. The network can be used to model various systems, such as computer networks, biological networks, and social networks.

In the context of the network, the boundaries of certain regions or subnetworks can be defined. These boundaries are determined by the edges that form the perimeter of these regions.

The network is a powerful tool for understanding complex systems and can be used to analyze and predict various phenomena within these systems.
